US EPA RECORDS CENTER REGION 5

For over 25 years, Egan Marine Corporation has served the Great Lakes, Inland River Systems, and the Intracostal Waterways in all aspects of marine transportation and vessel repair. Founded by Dennis Egan in 1965, the company has enjoyed a continuous growth and expansion to make it the only full-service shipyard within a 300 mile radius of Lemont and the Chicago area. Its marine fleet consists of 31 vessels including tugs and push boats capable of handling all types of marine situations and a full compliment of barges including liquid and dry cargo and ABS load line deck barges.

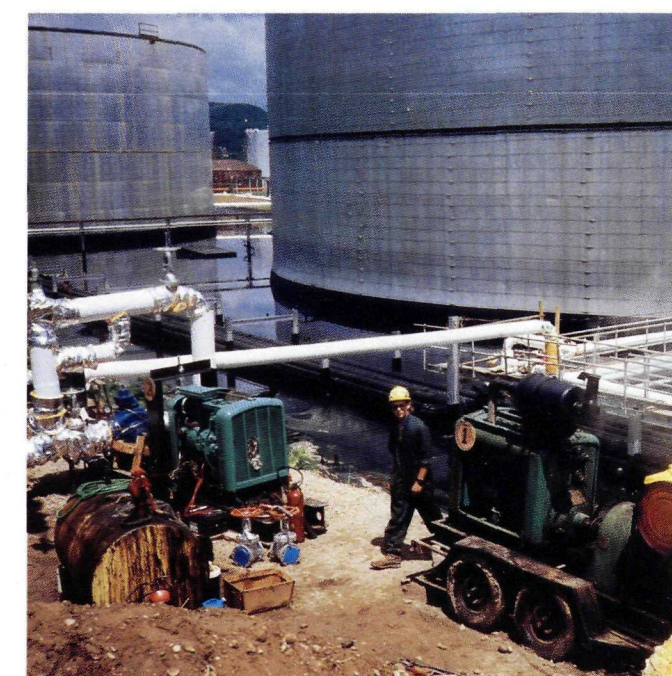

Strong and knowledgeable leadership, the correct equipment for each particular job, and a dependable support group of employees all combine to offer the most cost effective and on-time marine services available. Egan Marine Corporation and its sister companies, Continental Marine Transportation, Inc. and Service Welding and Shipbuilding, enjoy ongoing account relationships with major corporations such as Amoco Oil, Ashland Oil, Mobil Oil, Owens-Corning, ACBL, Ohio River, and Cargill, to name just a few. EMC has consistently provided these companies with the full marine service of transport and repair necessary for dependable cargo enfreightment.

In the early 1970's, Egan Marine Corporation expanded its operations to handle spill recovery emergencies. Long before the more recent industrial and marine environmental disasters, which have come to the forefront of everyone's concern, EMC was developing the skills and equipment necessary to minimize the damage of these types of disasters to our fragile environment as well as the bottom line. One of the more recent developments has been a new and unique process for the handling of difficult spills such as liquid asphalt. EMC has responded to spills totaling 25 million gallons in just the last 4 years. Besides clean-up, this process enables a recovery and re-use factor for materials of up to 90%. In 1990, EMC opened Continental Marine Transportation, Inc., a new marine towing and fleeting office, to service the southern portion of Lake Michigan more efficiently.

Egan Marine Corporation's success over the years has been based on capability and performance, two very important factors in any business relationship. Time and again, EMC has taken a can-do approach to each individual project in a constant effort to give its customers the most dependable marine and emergency services available. EMC hopes that as the need arises, you will allow us to demonstrate the ability and determination necessary for a successful job.
